Clinical Supervision

Why Supervision?

Interrelate views the practice of clinical supervision as a necessity for those working in human services. Supervision enhances worker well-being, staff and client relations and reduces the impact of workplace stress.

Supervision assists

- Clinical practices
- Staff and client engagement
- Effective communication
- Team morale
- Managing conflict
- Personal issues and stressors
- Family matters
- Balancing personal and organisational goals
- Clarifying organisational issues
- Ensuring ethical practice

Individual & groups

Individual, group and specialised clinical supervision can be negotiated for people working in human services, health services or related industries. Supervision can be conducted at local Interrelate centres or at the workplace.

Is it confidential?

Interrelate conducts its services in a professional confidential manner. All information is treated within strict privacy guidelines ensuring the integrity of the supervisory relationship. Interrelate adheres to practice outlined in the Privacy Act 1988.

Scheduled or as needed

Supervision schedules can be negotiated to suit individual needs. An individual session with a supervisor will be a one hour appointment. Group supervision sessions will be negotiated according to group size and requirements.

Supervision sessions can be scheduled regularly, or as a one-off individual or group session. Emergency supervision can also be provided in response to critical situations.

A focus on after hours service ensures that employees can access supervision to suit work patterns and other lifestyle factors.

Supervision will be tailored to meet the needs of the workplace and may encompass one or more of the options listed.

How much does it cost?

Fees are competitive. Specific details about cost are available from your local Interrelate centre. Fees are payable on the day of consultation by cash, cheque, credit card or organisations may arrange to be invoiced.
